"THE JACK-KNIFE MAN"
LATEST SCREEN NOVELTY

Peter Lane's Aunt Jane was a popular weeping widow. Finally her tears drove the distracted Peter from home to take up his abode in a shanty boat on the Mississippi river. By whittling wooden figures with his trusty jackknife he soon developed a meager demand among the thrifty housewives for his work.

In a driving storm, there came a woman and a crippled boy of four, seeking refuge from the storm. As there was only one thing to do Peter did it. He made the pair comfortable and then set out in the driving storm for the house of Mrs. Potter, a sharp-tongued widow who had sentimental designs upon him. Virtually pawning his treasured glass clock, Peter obtained food for his uninvited guests.

Upon the death of the mother a little later, Peter learned that she was a notorious woman called Lucy from a near-by town. A child's welfare society had already found a "home" for Buddy's sister Jessie and the fear that they would also take Buddy from her drove the woman to the houseboat for refuge. With his last remaining dollar Peter gave the woman a decent burial.

"Boogy," a tramp, finds his way to the houseboat and becomes a pal of Peter's and Buddy's. The fact that Briggs, a former preacher, who has appointed himself president of a house-busting society and who may take Buddy away worries Peter. Moreover, there is the knowledge that most of the town thinks that the woman who died on the houseboat is the wife of Peter regardless of the wedding ceremony.

Felling Briggs' attempt to take Buddy away from the boat, Peter smuggles the boy to the home of his Aunt Jane. She cries him out of the house. On the way back Peter finds in a dingy store where he and Buddy stop for food, a little girl whom Buddy recognizes as his sister Susan. Against his will Peter is forced to leave the girl there, promising to come back for her some day.

Failing to find a home for him, Peter gives Buddy to Briggs in the presence of the Widow Potter. The child's affliction and his refusal to go with Briggs, induces the widow to adopt him without Peter's knowledge.

Through hard work and a stroke of good fortune, an interesting tale awaits Peter and this includes Buddy, Jessie, Susan and the Widow Potter, who finally finds a man to marry her. On the screen at the Columbus theater Thursday, December 10.

"THE DREAM CHEATER," FINE KERRIGAN PRODUCTION, HERE
